Here are some more of the poems and essays already submitted; SWAT THE FLY.

The house fly carries germs on a body and legs, which it deposits on whatever it alights. Its farand it lives on the filthiest as well as the best. It may be one minute on a cat or dog or in an open gar-bage can and the next on the food on our table or crawling around the baby's mouth. It is from just such causes that many babies die and others are cripples. There is also a big green fly which comes in the hot weather and likes to get in the hot weather and likes to get on the window-pane and make a great buzzing noise. This one too likes to find uncovered food, especially meat, on which it lays eggs, which hatch out in maggots and the food is spoiled.

I think the best way to get rid of these germs is to keep house and grounds free from rubbish; also to have windows and doors screened; then, if any do get in, swat them good and hard. A good way to catch them is to put some sugar on sticky fly-paper.

"May 17" asked Pinnell, his soft, full-toned voice implying that to dance with her was the one object of his life.

"Certainly. I shall be pleased."

Courteous was Neala, but indifferent. "I am indeed fortunate. It seems that the next dance is open. There is no name beside it."

"I have readon," polity interrupted.
